

100 trillion Russian points

Overview

Within days of the Russian invasion of Ukraine in February 2022 Western countries moved to freeze Russian Central Bank funds in these countries. This was followed by proposals to permanently confiscate these frozen assets to pay for the reconstruction of Ukraine. As of late 2025, the legality of such expropriation remains untested and heavily disputed. In March 2023 (prior to th. Euroclear, the based in Belgium, holds frozen Russian assets variously. In September 2023, the (RDI) released a report (lead author) which concluded that Russia's arguments against confiscating its frozen state assets and transferrin. The EU has concluded that it "can't legally confiscate outright frozen Russian assets", but the annual profits from the investment of those assets is expected to be around €3 billion (US$3.4 billion) and a "windfall profits tax" on tho. , president of the, which takes a view opposite that of the European Commission concerning the risks of using these profits for the benefit of Ukraine, warned the • • • • • 1. ^ Technically, this was accomplished not by freezing the assets but by making it illegal to engage in any reserve management transactions with the Russian central bank. 2. ^ For example, the West may give th.
